England Men's Mixed Disability squad announced for historic series

England Men's Mixed Disability team have named their squad for the historic series against India.

Callum Flynn, who has been captain of England Men's Physically Disabled team, will become the first ever captain of England Men's Mixed Disability side. The team will be coached by Jason Weaver.

The team will play India in seven Vitality IT20s. Each format of disability cricket must be represented by three players in the starting XI.

Ian Martin, ECB Head of Disability Cricket, said: “We’re getting closer to such a huge moment for disability cricket and it’s thrilling to be able to name a squad.

“When you’ve watched the Physical Disability, Learning Disability and Hearing Impaired squads for as long as I have, to see these kind of names together in one squad is hugely exciting. The standard is going to be through the roof, and I just know that people who’ve never watched disability cricket before are going to love what they see.

“I’m delighted to be able to confirm Callum as the captain of this side, as well. He’s a terrific leader, he’s someone who commands respect and it’ll be special for him and all his teammates to walk out together as the first England Men’s Mixed Disability side.

“I’m hoping that the cricket on show in this series demonstrates what a huge moment of progress this could be for disability cricket and disability sport in general, and I hope it helps more people across the world access our game.”
